Spring 2017

James Ford Jr.
Alumnus of the Year

From the Executive Director

Nancy signs the guest book at D. L. Moody's desk in Northfield, Mass.

Dear friends,

I hope you were able to join us for Founder's Week in February, when we gathered for alumni reunions and heard outstanding preaching. Getting to see so many alumni was a special treat.

Another treat was getting to visit D. L. Moody's Northfield and Mount Hermon School campuses in Massachusetts with the Alumni Board of Directors recently. Invited by great-grandson David Powell, we toured Moody's birthplace, museum, auditorium (where great revivals took place), the house where he spent his final years, and his grave. This part of the Northfield property was recently donated to the Moody Center, a nonprofit devoted to preserving Moody's legacy. The rest of the campus was given to Thomas Aquinas College in February. This news is exciting to me as an alumna, and I hope to offer an alumni tour there someday.

Look inside to read about alumni who are serving in diverse places including Chile, Colombia, Uganda—and Hollywood! I hope these stories inspire you to reach out with the truth of God's Word to people wherever you are.

Serving Christ together,

Nancy (Andersen '80) Hastings

Moody Begins Construction on Chapman Center

On November 18, 2016, Moody broke ground on the Chapman Center, a four-story building on Wells Street that will provide a new, collaborative space for Moody Radio and Moody Publishers. The 50,000-square-foot structure will include space for the Gary D. Chapman Exhibit and the Gary D. Chapman Chair of Marriage and Family, currently Dr. John Trent.

At an assembly before the groundbreaking, Moody president Dr. Paul Nyquist addressed the student body, employees, and friends in Torrey-Gray Auditorium: “The need for this new facility has been painfully evident for many years,” he said, describing the need for better facilities to propel Moody’s media ministries toward greater global ministry.

Last year content from Moody Radio was downloaded in 190 countries, while content from Moody Publishing was downloaded in 130 countries in 77 languages.

“Imagine when we can put all of Moody media—Moody Radio and Moody Publishing—under one roof and have them innovate and collaborate for greater kingdom impact,” said Nyquist, who added that many students will be mentored and trained for ministry in the Chapman Center. “That’s the vision behind this new building.”

The Chapman Center, the first new building on Moody’s Chicago campus in almost 20 years, is named after Dr. Gary Chapman ’58, the author of 46 Moody Publishers books, including the New York Times bestseller The Five Love Languages. He hosts a nationally syndicated Moody Radio program, A Love Language Minute, and a Saturday morning program, Building

Relationships with Dr. Gary Chapman.

Chapman also speaks to thousands of couples nationwide through his weekend marriage conferences.

He and his wife are giving a generous gift to help establish the Chapman Center. “It’s been my privilege to be associated with Moody Publishers since the 1970s and Moody Radio for almost 10 years,” Chapman told the assembly, “so I think it’s fitting that we’d be doing something to pay back those two great ministries.”

“Imagine when we can put all of Moody media under one roof and have them innovate and collaborate for greater kingdom impact.”

Chapman was in Jenkins Hall that morning when he read Colossians 4:17: “Take heed to the ministry which you have received in the Lord, that you may fulfill it.” Looking out the window at Moody’s campus, Chapman prayed, “Lord, you know that’s what I’ve been praying for many, many years—that I might fulfill the ministry you’ve given me.”

Chapman reminded the audience,

“There is nothing more important than being faithful. I want to challenge you to be faithful, faithful unto death with the ministry God has given us.”

Following the assembly, the groundbreaking ceremony was held on the site where the Chapman Center will be built. Moody Board of Trustees chair Randy Fairfax prayed, “Lord, help us to use [the Chapman Center] to continue to share your Word throughout your world.” He continued to pray for those in Moody Radio, Moody Publishers, and the students who will work and learn in the new building. “Help them to be creative, to use their minds, talents, intellect, and skills to glorify You. I pray that we would be good stewards of everything You give us and that it would reflect back to You and people might know You.”

The Chapman Center will begin construction soon and is scheduled to open its doors in spring 2018. Moody continues to raise funds for the $24 million project.

More photos of the groundbreaking and construction are available on Moody Bible Institute’s Facebook page. Watch an inspiring video at moodyglobal.org/chapmancenter.

Electronic Transcripts

Alumni can now order their official Moody transcripts online. The Office of Academic Records has implemented a new online transcript ordering process through Parchment Send for official transcripts to be sent both electronically and through the mail. To access the ordering site and set up an account, please visit the Alumni website at moody.edu/alumni/alumni-association/services/. Training Chicago-Area Ministry Leaders

Professor Eric Redmond

A successful pilot class led to the creation of Moody's new Spiritual Leadership Academy, offering Chicago-area ministry leaders Bible training in an affordable, continuing education format.

In the fall of 2016, Moody assistant professor Eric C. Redmond taught "Bible Study Methods," a 16-hour course offered one Saturday per month on the Chicago campus. More than 130 leaders attended, including pastors, Sunday school teachers, small group leaders, women's ministry directors, church counselors, and worship leaders. The course taught students to interpret the Sermon on the Mount as a case study for interpreting didactic literature.

Carla Bonner, a Sunday school teacher in Chicago who attended the class, says the course caused her to look at the Bible differently. "That's my biggest take-away, to study differently, to make sure I'm focusing on the intent and not necessarily pulling out just the application."

In January, Redmond began teaching "Tell the Whole Story: Interpreting Biblical Narrative," with the goal of offering tips and resources for preaching and teaching biblical narratives.

Otis Wright, who has served as an adult Sunday school teacher for almost 30 years, says Redmond's method and approach has transformed the way he now teaches. "He really opens up the classroom for discussion and carefully guides a person to the truth, so I've used that method now. That's powerful."

Redmond, who has a master's from Dallas Theological Seminary and is pursuing his PhD from Capital Seminary, enjoys the opportunity to teach biblical skills to others. Redmond uses Facebook as a learning management system for the course, where he posts videos, PowerPoint presentations, and notes for the group.

'We Need Christian Education'

The first course came about after Moody's president, Dr. Paul Nyquist, and Roy Patterson '84, special assistant to the president for community relations, met with 16 Chicago-area pastors. Patterson says a common theme was heard: "We need Christian education, so if you could help train our leaders, that would be wonderful."

The pastors requested more teaching, especially for those lacking formal theological or biblical training. As a result, Moody Bible Institute Distance Learning began offering courses for continuing education units.

"The turnout far exceeded all of our expectations," Redmond says. "People are hungry for knowledge of the Scriptures." For example, Pastor James Meeks of Salem Baptist Church in Chicago who is also a Moody

Trustee sent 70 teachers and ministry leaders from his church.

Moody is planning additional courses, including “Interpreting Biblical Poetry” and “Communicating Biblical Truth.” “Since we’re in Chicago, we want to ensure that we are impacting our city and building relationships,” Patterson stresses. “But the goal doesn’t end with Chicago, our state, or the Midwest; we want to reach our country and the nations with the truth of God’s Word so many more men and women can be equipped to make an impact for Christ.”

Moody Hires Assistant Dean of Multicultural Students

Edward Jones IV, the new assistant dean of multicultural students on the Chicago campus, provides mentoring to minority students and works with minority student-focused groups. Jones is helping Moody create and foster conversation and change on campus surrounding issues related to diversity.

“To be at Moody, a place equipping those who will shape the church moving forward, is an amazing and awesome opportunity,” says Jones.

He is also contributing his voice and perspective as a member of Moody’s Diversity Committee, which has been chaired by Moody’s president, Dr. Paul Nyquist, since its inception nearly four years ago. This committee made the recommendation to create the position Jones now holds.

“I’m very proud of the committee’s hard work in helping set forth a vision for diversity at Moody,” Nyquist says. “While Moody has made great progress, particularly in the area of bringing in more diverse staff, faculty, students and trustees, we have been listening carefully to our minority students and have learned that there is a need for more progress to be made in the area of creating a place where they are more comfortable. With Ed's passion, love for the Lord, and extensive experience in higher education, social service work, and pastoral ministry, he will be indispensable in this effort."

More than Qualified

Born in Tulsa, Oklahoma, Jones grew up in the historic Greenwood neighborhood. Well known as one of the most flourishing African-American communities in the early 1900s, it was the tragic scene of the 1921 Tulsa Race Riot, one of the worst urban racial conflicts in U.S. history.

"To be at Moody, a place equipping those who will shape the church moving forward, is an amazing and awesome opportunity."

After his family moved to Chicago's South Side, Jones developed a passion for issues related to diversity and justice, which carried over into his college years at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. There he helped lead a peer-based Bible study for minority students and earned a BA in political science with a double minor in sociology and African-American studies. Jones was licensed to preach in 1994, right before his 21st birthday, then was ordained in 1999.

After marrying his wife, LaTanya, he served in social service agency work in Chicago, pastored in Tulsa, and worked at a corporation in northern California. In 2009, they moved back to Chicago where he earned an MDiv at North Park Seminary. He served with the university's dean of diversity and intercultural programs, helped launch a diversity conference, and organized an African-American lecture series. He also pastored a church in a southwest suburb.

In September 2014 Jones joined the leadership of the Illinois Baptist State Association. He traveled around the country locating, training, and resourcing partners for multicultural church plants.

A Minority Student Advocate

At Moody since August 2016, Jones says he is focused on three things: bringing students' ideas and concerns to leadership; helping establish a vibrant, diverse culture on campus; and helping minority students identify financial resources for educational costs, as well as resources that will help them succeed in their studies and preparation for ministry.

"When we are born again, the Lord doesn't change our culture, heritage, or traditions, so culture shock can take place on both sides when students of color come to campus," he says. "I want to help Moody understand the perspectives of our students so they are more comfortable and their talents and gifts are being fully maximized and developed so they can successfully go into the context where the Lord leads them to serve."

Jones and his wife, LaTanya, live in a southwest suburb of Chicago with their three daughters and two sons.

Moody Radio Trains Christian Media in Bulgaria

Moody Radio held its sixth Global Partners Training event in November 2016, this time in Sofia, Bulgaria. The conference included five training tracks: on-air work, radio production, digital media, video production, and leadership. Each track offered four classes, such as “How to Write a Social Media Campaign,” “Advanced Interview Skills,” and “Keeping the Bible Central.” Dr. Samuel Naaman, professor of world missions and evangelism at Moody, taught spiritual formation each morning. Evening sessions devoted time to prayer for the nations and covered such topics as “Practical Solutions for Christian Media in Europe.”

“It was obvious throughout the conference that our team was well supported in prayer,” says Jon Gauger '80, who leads special projects for Moody Radio. “God kept us healthy, engaged, and energized. Working with our superbly organized host team in Sofia, as well as the more than 100 people who came for the training from nearly a dozen countries, was a reminder that God has His handpicked servants all over the globe, and we have much to learn from them!”

Several alumni served or led sessions at the conference, including Stephen Asare BA '08, manager of donor appreciation and channel strategy at Moody Global Ministries, Chris Segard '95, Moody Radio’s manager of production services, Nate McMillan BA '07, MAMin '12, adjunct faculty member in Moody’s Communications department and Moody Radio producer, Elizabeth Doogan BA '14, web content specialist for Moody Radio Network, and Hadassah (Lachmann BA '16) Carlson, donor marketing specialist.

Students proudly display their certificates at the conclusion of Global Partners Training.

Alumnus of the Year James Ford Jr.

“He has a holy boldness to proclaim Christ,” said Roy Patterson ’81, special assistant to the president for Community Relations at Moody Global Ministries.

“He is able to vividly take the Bible in one hand and real life in the other and bring the two together,” said Dr. Erwin Lutzer, emeritus pastor of The Moody Church.

Cheers and applause rang out at The Moody Church on Alumni Day, Feb. 7, as Pastor James Ford Jr. ’84 was recognized as the 2017 Alumnus of the Year. Nancy Hastings, executive director of the Alumni Association, presented the award.

“Pastor Ford’s life and preaching has had a profound effect on many,” she said. “Not only does his church benefit from his knowledge, but also the Church at large through his deep, rich voice heard over the radio and through his publishing ministry.”

Ford has served as senior pastor of Christ Bible Church of Chicago since 1982, a position he began after enrolling at Moody as a 30-year-old married man with three children. He has a master’s degree from Trinity Evangelical Divinity School and serves as the president of Impact Ministries, a church outreach dedicated to strengthening families in the South Shore community of Chicago. He has authored several books on marriage and relationships, including Moody Publishers’ When a Man Loves a Woman, When a Woman Loves a Man, and Seven Reasons Why God Created Marriage. His Bible teaching program, Treasured Truth, airs daily on Moody Radio and 160 affiliate stations.

“We live our lives with this motto: Everything without Christ equals nothing,” said Ford, who accepted the award with his wife, Leslie. “A lot of things are out of place because Christ is not in first place. And when Christ is not valued above all, Christ is not valued at all. We just thank you for such a great honor, a great privilege.”

God bless the school. Since 1901, Founder’s Week has offered outstanding Bible teaching from the nation’s Christian leaders. Watch this year’s speakers at foundersweek.com.

‘Do you live in 1:21 or in 2:21?’ Alumni Day speaker David Anderson ’89, founder and senior pastor of Bridgeway Community Church in Columbia, Maryland, asked, “Do you live in Philippians 1:21—‘To live is Christ and to die is gain’—or in 2:21—living for your own interests, not those of Jesus Christ?” Anderson was the first black student body president of Moody and remembers proposing to his wife, Amber (Thonnes ’90), in Torrey Gray.

Long-term impact. Alumni Day speaker Eric Rivera ’03, enjoyed the Alumni Banquet with his wife, Erikah (Combs ’03), and the man who mentored him as a youth and provided PCM opportunities, Inner City Impact founder Bill Dillon ’65, along with Dillon’s wife, Sandra (left).

With enthusiasm. Ike Nichols, a senior composition major and Men’s Choir member, led the singing of “Blessed Assurance” on Alumni Day’s evening session.

Heaven-worthy singing. On Tuesday night, Men's Choir directors Vann Trapp '57 (1964–74), Dr. Terry Strandt (1989–92), and Dr. H. E. Singley '71 (1996–present) conducted “Laudamus,” “Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing,” and “Power of the Cross,” respectively.

Faculty Citation Award: Dr. Gregg Quiggle

Professor of theology Dr. Gregg Quiggle received the 2017 Faculty Citation Award. Celebrating 30 years with Moody this year, Dr. Quiggle studies American religious history and is a noted D. L. Moody scholar. As dean of Moody's Study Abroad program, he organizes student groups to study church history, theology, and the Bible in Israel, Germany, Greece, and other places around the world.

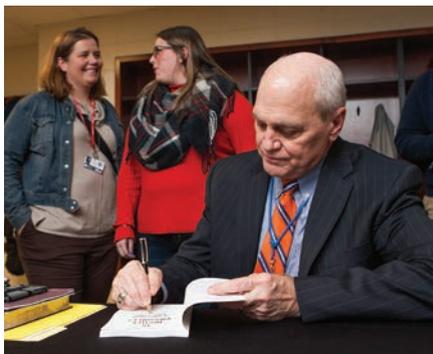

“Gregg has had a consistent record of excellence as an instructor and colleague,” said Dr. James Spencer MDiv '04, vice president of Moody Bible Institute. “His most recent work on Moody's Study Abroad program is an excellent example of his passion to educate students well and to prepare them for a lifetime of ministry.”

Alumni gathering. Hundreds of alumni reunited with friends at the Alumni Banquet on Feb. 7 of Founder’s Week 2017.

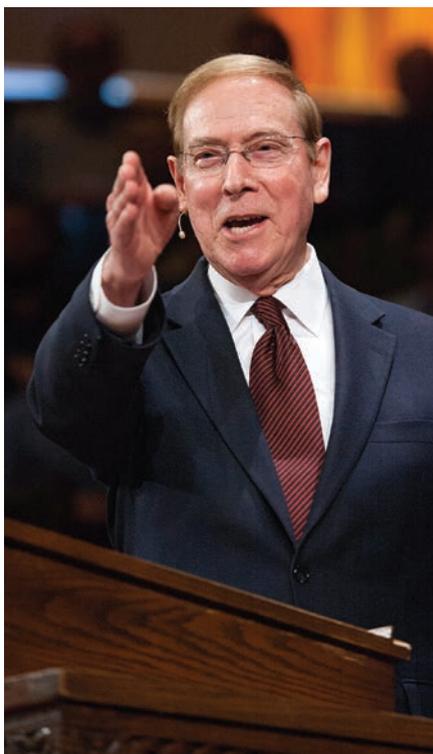

Autographing copies. Moody President Paul Nyquist signed copies of his new book Is Justice Possible? after the alumni dinner.

‘It was an amazing time.’ So said Ken Kemp ’69, (left) who with his brother, Roger ’78, (right) reunited with the Moody Men’s Glee Club/Men’s Collegiate Choir for its 60th anniversary. Both had been president of the choir while students. “Our conductor Mr. Vann Trapp made a powerful, powerful impact on my life, and I’m grateful,” said Ken, a pastor and western regional director for Operation Mobilization. Roger, who works in media with nonprofit ministries, adds, “I enjoy all kinds of music but I’m forever indebted to Moody for giving me a taste of sacred music.”

“The healthiest relationship with God is when we learn to speak all five love languages to God,” said Dr. Gary Chapman ’58, author of The 5 Love Languages. He spoke Tuesday night.

Alumni giving for 2016. More than 3,700 alumni gave $1.7 million to Moody Bible Institute in restricted and unrestricted giving. A total of 23 alumni gave $3,402,739 in deferred giving, the second highest amount ever for deferred giving. Total alumni giving for 2016: $5,131,355.63. Praise the Lord!

FINDING HUMILITY IN HOLLYWOOD

Wearing a Barney Dinosaur costume at a birthday party, David A. R. White sank to a low point in his acting career. He had been fired from a hit TV show by his boss, Burt Reynolds, and other acting opportunities had started to shrivel up. Why had God let him taste Hollywood success, only to let it slip away?

Growing up as the youngest son of Gene White, a conservative Mennonite pastor in Kansas, David didn't watch much television and had seen only one movie in the theater in 18 years. Yet he'd dreamed of going into the entertainment industry since his youth.

That dream didn't sit well with his father, who wanted each of his children to attend Moody Bible Institute for at least one year. "It's really the only school our family holds dear to our hearts," David explains. After all, his parents had met at Moody: His mom, Marceil Williams '56, was a student when his dad worked for Moody before becoming a pastor. David's older brother Tim White '82, sister-in-law Naoko Kimura '89, older sister

Michelle White '87, and brother-in-law Abel Peña '88, graduated from Moody and went into ministry. "My entire family found their significant others there," David says. "They thought I would do the same thing."

His father hoped David would follow in his footsteps to become an evangelist. And David did go to Moody, studying the Bible and playing trumpet in the Symphonic Band. "I loved Moody, loved my classes, it was a great experience, but I couldn't shake the dream of going into the entertainment industry, he says."

With trepidation, he called his father one day and said that at the end of his first year at Moody, he wanted to move to Hollywood to be an actor.

After a pause, his father replied, “As long as you serve the Lord in whatever you do, we support you.”

David was 19 when he moved to California. Six months later, he landed a job working as an extra on Evening Shade, a sitcom filled with Emmy winners and Hollywood icons like Burt Reynolds. He continued to find success, scoring more acting jobs and guest-star appearances on TV shows like Melrose Place. He also joined a church in Los Angeles and got his first starring role in a Christian film called Second Glance. His dream was becoming a reality.

Living a Nightmare

But Hollywood success seemed short-lived. At the end of season three,

Burt Reynolds chose him to parody his character in an episode. David committed the cardinal sin: he amused the audience but ended up offending the star. Burt Reynolds cut him from the show but never explained why. Soon other acting jobs dried up. “My career turned sour, I couldn’t get a job, and my life felt like it came to a screeching halt,” he says.

His desire had been to make money as a famous celebrity, while still retaining his Christian beliefs and standards. How could God allow him to succeed and then fail?

Disappointed and frustrated, he slowly stopped going to church, let his Bible gather dust, and started experimenting with things he would not have done a few years earlier, such as dating non-Christians and drinking to excess. He wanted to marry a Broadway dancer but his struggling work life didn't impress her parents. In Hollywood, where he says "being a Christian isn't popular," he found himself wondering, Do I believe what I believe just because I grew up in it?

He was broke and broken-hearted. Maybe it was time to give up his movie career. Ironically, God would use a movie to draw David back to Himself.

Giving God Glory

In his late twenties, David got a desk job at a casting company that led to a successful faith-based movie, even while he was still living an un-Christian life. Then he was cast in the movie, Mercy Streets, playing twins who were separated at birth. One became a con artist and the other a preacher.

"At the end, each of the twins had to decide—and I had to decide as well. Life imitating art," David recalls. "Was I going to be a con man or was I going to be a preacher? Was I truly going to be a believer? Because if I was, then I needed to lay down the stuff that wasn't of the Lord and go back to my first roots and really love Jesus Christ."

While the movie didn't perform the way he wanted it to, it led David to stop focusing on himself and re-devote his life to the Lord. Instead of chasing a self-serving dream of success in Hollywood, he decided to let the Lord redirect his dream to impact others and bring glory to God.

"When things are really hard and God challenges us through different struggles in our life, those are the times where He ultimately puts us through the fire, refining us for what He wants us to be," David says.

"The more successful I become, the more humbling it is, the more I really, really need the Lord's leading in so many different ways."

In 1998 he formed a Bible study group with other broken Hollywood actors in an effort to be light in the darkness. "It's amazing to see what God will do with a little when you give Him what you have," he says. In 2002 he met his wife at a Los Angeles church. After producing a successful Christian movie in 2004, David partnered with two other people to form Pure Flix, an independent production and distribution company whose mission is to influence the global culture for Christ through media. By the end of 2012, Pure Flix had produced more than 15 faith-based films and distributed another 50 worldwide.

In 2014 they produced God's Not Dead, but no studios would take it on for distribution. While Pure Flix had successfully released movies to DVD and television, their dream was to release God's Not Dead in theaters.

"This was a dream that was bigger than us, a massive risk," David says. The risk paid off. With a $2 million budget, the movie grossed more than $60 million at domestic box offices.

Altogether, David has starred in more than 25 films, produced more than 40 films, and recently launched Pureflix.com to offer a Christian alternative to Hollywood fare. Last fall he wrote Between Heaven and Hollywood: Chasing Your God-Given Dreams (Zondervan), which shares anecdotes from his acting pursuits and how God pursued him.

Living in Hollywood with his wife, Andrea, and three children,

David says success has not gone to his head. "The more successful I become, the more humbling it is, the more I really, really need the Lord's leading in so many different ways," he says. "I start every day on my knees in prayer. It's a humbling way to kick off the day and a reminder that I live to serve God. This act of humility gives me courage and strength."

From Fear to Friends

Missionary Serina Klotz opens her home and heart in Colombia

When Serina Klotz '14 moved to Colombia as a single missionary with Camino Global, her worst fear wasn't encountering FARC guerrilla rebels or learning to speak Spanish fluently. It was the thought of being alone. "I'm a super social person," says Serina, the oldest of six siblings. So when she moved into a place by herself a year after her arrival, she panicked.

"I'm going to drive myself nuts. I need community, noise," recalls Serina, who serves as a youth leader at Vida Nueva Iglesia (New Life Church) outside Colombia's capital city of Bogota.

Living by herself has turned out to be a blessing. "I've really come to enjoy it because I get the rest I need. Speaking another language all the time is a whole new level of exhaustion," she says.

With her gift of hospitality, Serina is never alone for long. "God's used my fear of loneliness as a really awesome motivation for ministry because I do like having people over." Young people come over for coffee and end up staying for hours. "Colombians love coffee. Coffee is not a twenty-minute thing; it's a four-hour thing."

New believers ask her faith and theology questions, such as, "Can I go out with my friends anymore? Can I have non-Christian friends? How do I witness to them without losing them as friends?" Serina enjoys each opportunity for relational discipleship.

"These are serious, important concepts you can't really answer in a church service or Sunday school class," she says. "You need a private time like that."

Serina encourages her friends to look to the Lord and to the Word, often pointing them to appropriate verses. "I do have a lot more Bible training than anyone else does here, and that is all due to Moody. I function as the library. I don't necessarily have the life experience to answer all those questions, but I do have the study and the training."

She adds, "They might not be able to sit in a systematic theology class or read the books I was exposed to, but I can do a smaller, simpler version for them to begin to grow."

Outreach in Colombia

For the last year Serina has been a leader at her church's family outreach program, Xtreme Life. She works with children and teens, teaches English classes, and organizes cultural events, including the Christmas play and Christmas choir. "I'm also in charge of a kids' retreat, and I help with VBS," says Serina.

Two girls receive their first Bible at Proyecto Dar.

For the second year in a row she promoted Proyecto Dar, a fundraiser that supplied 165 Bibles to impoverished children and 130 devotionals to parents last fall. In the laid-back Colombian culture, Serina was surprised to see children line up 30 minutes early at the local school that hosted the event. She and her assistants showed the children how to find the Christmas story in their Bibles and read about Jesus. Along with snacks and face painting, "it was an absolutely beautiful day full of God's joy and love found in Christ," she says.

Another favorite event is "Domingo Lingo de Gringo," which she hosts monthly for her 25 English students. When Chicago was the topic, she served Chicago-style hot dogs and Garrett Mix popcorn, while sharing her Moody experiences and photos. They discussed dorm life, seasonal activities, and even how Chicago's gang violence differs from Colombia's issue with drug cartels. "It was fun to share about my college days and pray for my friends that are serving in that city," she says.

Missions and Moody

Serina was saved at age seven when a friend brought her to an evangelistic kids' event in her New Jersey hometown. Her mom became a Christian around the same time and her dad was saved when she was 12. "I prayed for my dad every Sunday for five years," she says.

Serina's relatives ridiculed her family for becoming Christians and stopped sharing holidays with them. "I understand what it's like to have people in your family not talk to you because you're Christians," Serina says to young believers in her Colombian church. They listen, as many of them are the only Christians in their family, she explains. "They're like, 'Well, if she can be a missionary, then I can be a missionary.'"

Serina is the first missionary in her family. At age 14 she helped people affected by Hurricane Katrina. At 16 she led a seven-year-old girl to the Lord during a trip to Mexico, reminding Serina of her own conversion. While still in high school, she interned in Kenya, exploring options like medical care. "But no matter what I did, I ended up with the kids," she says, realizing her calling.

She also met Dan ASP '80 and Sue Wicher ASP '80, Moody graduates with Camino Global. "You need to go to Moody and then come work for Camino," they told her.

God led Serina to do both. She majored in Bible and intercultural ministry at Moody with an emphasis in children's ministry. She started learning Spanish and joined the leadership team of Puente, Moody's Spanish club. "Those friends were hugely influential, helping me understand Latino culture," she says. Also helpful were professors like Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, who taught her skills for children’s ministry, and Dr. Rosalie de Rosset ’80, who helped Serina think through her theology as a woman in a Latino context.

Practical Christian Ministry opportunities helped her grow in her faith, especially her two years of outreach to prostitutes rehabilitating at the Chicago Dream Center. “Not only did I have to learn how to trust God in, at times, dangerous situations but I was challenged on how to share God’s love with people that have suffered so much,” she says.

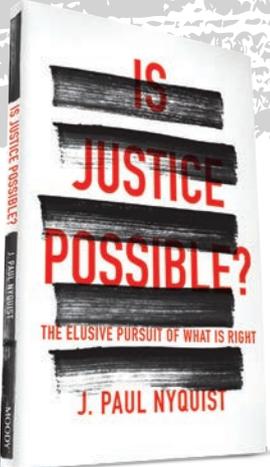

Sharing the Struggle

Serina hasn’t been back to New Jersey since she moved to Colombia in August 2015. “Part of ministering to people is spending time with them through everything—Christmas, Easter, birthdays, vacation time,” she says.

In a culture where people tend to follow the leader, her goal in discipleship is to teach them to use the Bible and think for themselves, much like her theology classes at Moody taught her. “I appreciated the struggle I went through to know what I think about key doctrines—I want them to experience that same struggle themselves,” she says.

Regarding salvation, for example, she tells them, “You’re not saved because you have a good pastor; you’re saved because of your personal faith. I want you to believe it because you know it’s true, because that’s what the Bible says, and then show it to me.”

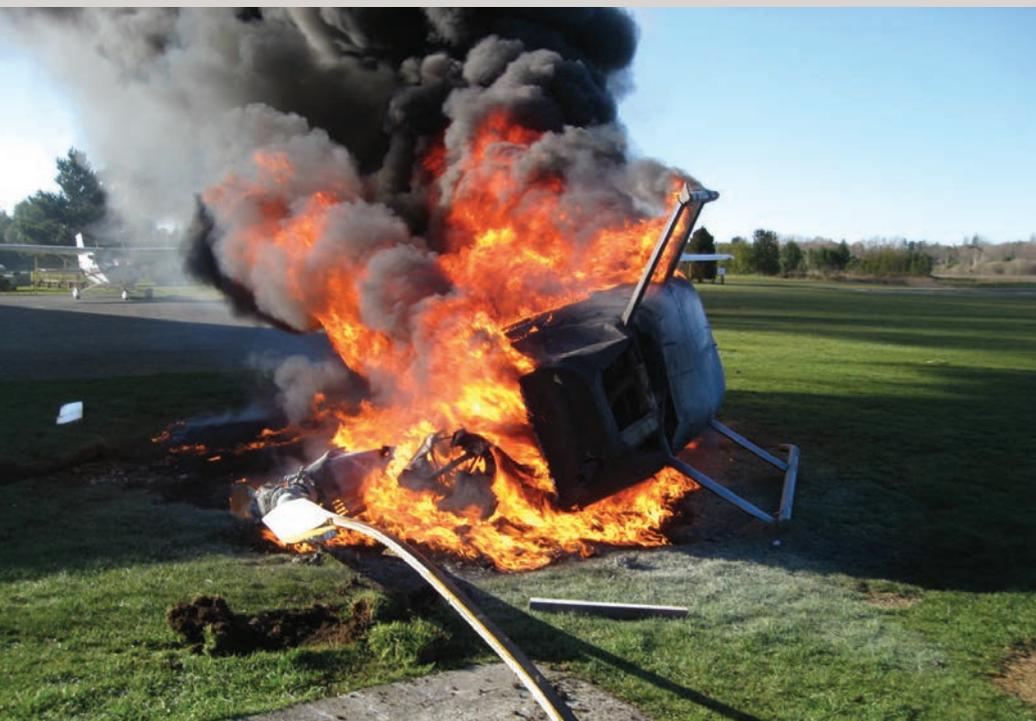

IS JUSTICE POSSIBLE?

If our world is so sophisticated, why is there so much injustice? What can believers do? Can we ever expect justice? Dr. Paul Nyquist addresses these questions in a new book that explores a key attribute of God. Rather than rely on our own ideas of justice, we must look to the One who made us and embodies justice perfectly.

We'd like to send you Is Justice Possible?, our thank you for a gift of any amount. Reserve your copy today on the attached card or online at moodyalumni.org.

NOT ALONE

What a near-death experience taught Christian Konow about trust

On September 1, 2010, Moody alumnus Christian Konow '84 strapped himself into his Robinson R44 Raven II helicopter and started the engine for a routine maintenance check. As the blades began to spin, a strong gust struck the helicopter and the nearby hangar wall, causing a vortex that made the helicopter buck. The helicopter overturned, bursting into flames.

Fuel began pouring into the cockpit. Fire quickly engulfed Christian, igniting his hair and sucking oxygen out of his lungs. He buried his face in his clothes, thinking, There's no way I'm getting out of here.

Then another split-second thought troubled him: Now I'm going to die; have I believed right? This thing of studying the Bible and following Christ, is all that I've believed right?

Trapped, Christian's thoughts turned to the God in whom he'd put his trust. I'm about to die. Show me the steps of how to get out of here—if you want me to. And help me stay calm.

Christian sensed three clear instructions, which, despite doubts, he followed one at a time: He lowered his right hand and undid his seatbelt, kicked hard with his right leg, and did a sit-up, throwing himself forward. Suddenly he was propelled out of the helicopter. "I was burning and smoking but tremendously calm," he says. He moved to safety, pushed a Cessna out of harm's way, then looked back to see the helicopter explode.

"I'm about to die. Show me the steps of how to get out of here—if you want me to."

A mechanic helped Christian get under a shower, putting the fire out. When the ambulance arrived and he was put on the stretcher, his body convulsed in pain and went into shock. At a local hospital, Christian was put on a ventilator; three days later he was airlifted to a burn unit in Santiago, Chile, where he spent 20 days in an induced coma.

Looking for Answers

Christian was born of German descent in southern Chile. He studied philosophy in public high school and read existentialists like Descartes. His readings pushed him to consider an absolute, which led to a quandary: "Where did it all come from? If God is God, why can't we talk to him, like on the phone? Why so much hide and seek?" he recalls.

Christian didn't know much about the Bible but he had heard a story of Mary, Joseph, and a donkey, which seemed childish. "I always assumed that people who believe religious things were dimwitted and superstitious and their beliefs didn't go with science and reason and math," he says.

But his questions persisted until he finally picked up a Bible and prayed: "If this book has some connection to you, God—if you do exist out there—I honestly would like to know." He opened the Bible to 1 Corinthians 15:17 and read, "If Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile; you are still in your sins." Yet according to verse 20, "Christ has indeed been raised from the dead." He pondered the words and prayed, So you're telling me that if I know Christ, I can know God?

After becoming a believer, Christian understood Jesus Christ as a person, not an abstract idea. "I started interacting with Jesus and learning about Jesus and His character," he says.

For several years he didn't know any other Christians. Evangelicals in Chile were primarily poor and uneducated, he says. Later, during a student exchange program in Iron Mountain, Mich., he became involved in a church and was baptized. There, Pastor Lloyd Tornell '37 pointed him toward Moody. After returning home, and despite resistance from his parents who wanted him to study for a lucrative career, Christian left Chile again—this time for Moody.

“I didn’t know the Scriptures, so I wanted to know what this book was all about,” Christian explains. He started in Moody Aviation and later transferred to the missions program.

He struggled with a rebellious streak at Moody (“I was the kind of person who did not abide by all the rules,” he says), but he finished his three-year diploma and says Moody provided him with a good biblical foundation. It is also where he met Kathleen Genheimer ’84, a music major whose parents and grandparents had been missionaries in South Africa.

After Christian and Kathleen married, they moved to South Carolina, where he completed an MA in missions at Columbia International University in 1987. “I matured a little more by that point,” he says. After they moved to Chile, he and two others started and began pastoring a church called Amigos de la Biblia (Friends of the Bible). To support his wife and four sons, he managed a family agricultural business. In 2008 Christian and an old friend started Navitas, a renewable energy company. They bought a helicopter to do survey work around the mountains. “We succeeded. We’re still doing it,” he says.

Meanwhile he planted a church in Osorno, Chile, called El Galpon (the Barn), which recently entered into association with New Life Community Church, founded by Mark Jobe ’84 in Chicago. “My passion is church planting,” Christian says. And his passion for God reached a whole new level after the helicopter accident.

Time Alone, Time with God

Christian remembers the induced coma. “You’re lying there like a corpse, and it’s lonely and dark. You cannot talk to your wife or doctor, and there’s nobody there,” he recalls. “So I said, God, where are you in all of this? Why did I get out of the helicopter?”

Finally, a reply came in the form of a question: Have you ever lacked anything in your life? Have you been hungry, naked?

That was simple. No, my basic needs have always been covered.

Second question: That being the case, would you not be willing to trust Me even under these circumstances?

Trickier to answer. Tell me what you mean by trusting.

The reply: Absolute silence.

Kathleen and Christian Konow

Christian realized he couldn’t fake an answer. He understood the struggle between wanting to be the focal point of his own life and depending completely on Christ. But he didn’t want to stay in that loneliness. He had to be honest. So okay, God, here goes my final answer: The Lord is my Shepherd. I have never wanted. . . . Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil for You are with me.

Christian continued, God, if you want me to die, I refuse to die without You. But if we do this journey, we do it together. Let’s do it.

Suddenly Christian didn’t feel alone. “I was in such good company. I don’t know how to explain how un-alone I was.”

When he woke up from the coma, he couldn’t speak yet. With his thumb sticking out from a bandaged hand, he scrawled his thoughts on paper. His wife became emotional. Thousands of people had been praying for his recovery, and “I have been praying Psalm 23 for you,” she said.

The Afterburn

Christian remained hospitalized for several surgeries and had to learn to walk again, but on October 13, 2010, he was transferred to rehab.

Since his recovery, he has shared his story in churches. “We’ve seen a lot of people come to Christ,” he says. “But it’s not about me. Even this accident is not about me. . . . It’s about God showing up and getting involved.”

“God takes you to the end of yourself and you’re helpless, and that’s what you’re supposed to be—helpless,” he tells his audience. “I don’t know if you believe in God or not, but I can tell you one thing: you don’t want to die alone. You don’t want to hear your voice and have no echo on the other side.”

“We’ve seen a lot of people come to Christ. But it’s not about me. Even this accident is not about me. . . . It’s about God showing up and getting involved.”

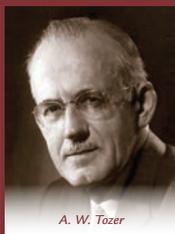

Christian urges others to trust Jesus Christ completely. “He is Yahweh, the Maker, Elohim, the Creator, the Alpha and the Omega, the source of life, the One who designed it all. Don’t usurp that.”

Women Serving in Intercultural and Urban Ministries

Raquel Toledo Promotes Church Training for Healthy Relationships

Raised by her Christian mother, Raquel (Freytes) Toledo MA '16 dreamed of one day marrying a man with a heart for missions and ministry. While dating men involved in ministry, however, she experienced a pattern of verbal abuse. She was repeatedly belittled by statements like: “You’re not good enough” and “Only someone dumb would marry you.”

While earning a master’s in counseling at DePaul University, Raquel wondered how many other young women experience abuse—whether emotional, sexual, or physical—and realized she wanted to help them. She pursued a second master’s degree: an MA [Intercultural and Urban Studies] at Moody Theological Seminary. When she found out she could pick her own research topic, she was sold. “As a Latina, I wanted to research the extent of intimate partner violence in Spanish-speaking evangelical churches, as well as the best ways to help pastors and leaders respond redemptively to domestic violence,” she says.

During her coursework, she interviewed leaders and pastors of Latino churches in Illinois to research the problem. She also launched a foundation, A Gift of Value, to provide a Christian perspective and training on women’s issues such as self-image, healthy boundaries, and intimate partner violence.

A God-Honoring Marriage

In 2014 she married David, an engineer on a youth ministry committee at her church. Her husband has played an important role in helping with her qualitative research and conferences, which have been held locally and in Panama, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Cuba. In fall 2016 Raquel also taught a course at Hispanic Bible School in Chicago on Domestic Violence and Crisis Intervention.

“Seminary for me was like taking God out of a box I never thought I had Him in.”

“Although I’ve been part of a church and faith community all my life, I honestly believe I would not have been able to put my faith in action had it not been for Moody Theological Seminary and the professors,” she says. “To hear of their personal journeys with God and to see how they have trusted the Lord has really transformed my life and the way I think. Seminary for me was like taking God out of a box I never thought I had Him in.”

Raquel Toledo speaks at a conference for church leaders in Camaguey, Cuba.

She also enjoyed her peers in the seminary program. “We were all walking by faith, not knowing what the future had for each of us but trusting that seminary was going to be a season where God was really going to reveal Himself to us,” she says.

Nancy Sell Ministers in the City of Detroit

When Nancy Sell MA '16 turned 14, her mother was declared unfit, so an older sibling became Nancy’s legal guardian. A year later Nancy was saved through the witness of a friend. Nancy earned a business degree in college, then married, gave birth to twins, and spent 15 years in a successful corporate career. But no matter what success Nancy found, she still carried a lot of bitterness about her upbringing.

Her life changed when she was invited to join her church on a mission trip to Honduras, working with orphans. “I saw what an orphan really was and I stopped feeling sorry for myself,” she says. “I came back with a drive to serve people in poverty.”

Nancy began volunteering in inner-city ministry and invited two African American teenage girls into her family. While working as a ministry director in an after-school program for teen girls, Nancy observed workers who desired to help but ended up hurting others. “I saw a lot of co-dependencies, a lot of people with savior complexes, thinking their way was better and trying to save the day,” she explains.

Wanting to find out how to equip others well, Nancy began graduate school at Moody Theological Seminary in Michigan.

Total Immersion

In her first class at Moody, Nancy learned a key to cross-cultural ministry: total immersion. “You really can’t serve going in and out of the culture; you have to live there,” she says. So she and Kevin, her husband of 30 years, uprooted themselves from a Detroit suburb and moved to the city.

“We’ve definitely been called to the city of Detroit,” Nancy says. She leads a women’s Bible study and is the operations manager at Citadel of Faith Covenant Church, where Kevin has a business leadership role. The couple takes mission trips to Africa as well. “It’s been a joint call, and we do ministry together,” she says.

Nancy chose to pursue the Master of Arts [Intercultural and Urban Studies] degree to prepare for ministry in diverse cultural settings. The program is offered on the Chicago campus, but she was able to complete the requirements for her major through online courses, modular courses, and directed studies. Courses like Life and Missiology of Cross-Bearing challenged her spiritually. “Dr. Pflederer really teaches you to be more dependent on the Lord, to bathe everything in prayer, to memorize Scripture, and to have accountability partners,” she says.

Learning from Local Sages

Nancy received a scholarship from Moody’s Urban Scholars Program in exchange for a commitment to serve Detroit’s underserved urban population. “One of the best things I learned is to sit at the feet of the local sages—to pay attention, learn from them, and serve them,” she says.

She interned with one of those sages at Central Detroit Christian: its director Lisa (Anderson ’79) Johanon.

“She’s wonderful,” says Nancy, who remembers volunteering one day when a woman named Mary came in for help. Lisa said to everyone in the office, “Stop what you’re doing right now. Mary needs prayer!” Nancy was inspired by Lisa’s spiritual focus. “This is what’s important,” she realized.

She made another Moody connection with Joseph Wainaina ’14, who founded a pastor-training school in Kenya. “My husband and I unpacked railroad cars of Bibles and built the shelves in the library,” says Nancy, who taught Spiritual Formation and Discipleship at the school during a visit last summer. She and Kevin are planning another trip there soon.

Through her MA studies, Nancy learned that discipleship is “doing life with people, living your life in front of them, modeling, teaching, but within relationship,” she says. “Moody has equipped me to do that with a more humble spirit and with more of an openness to the way other people think.

“Moody helped me to cultivate wisdom,” she adds. “Life is a lot more complicated than they can really teach you in a textbook. If they teach you wisdom, you can apply that anywhere.”

Trained to impact nations

Moody graduate returns to Uganda to equip pastors

by Haley Versluys

“This is an urgent need. This is a crisis. This is the body of Christ, and we must stand with each other,” says Richmond Wandera MDiv '11, CEO and founder of Pastors Discipleship Network. “Although there are over twenty-four million Christians in sub-Saharan Africa, eighty percent of pastors do not have any theological training.”

Without ministry skills and resources, pastors are in danger of distorting the gospel, abusing the ministry, causing conflict, and lacking accountability, he says. “There is something worse than not going to church. It is going to church and hearing heresy and false gospel.”

Through Pastors Discipleship Network, Richmond is making a difference by training and equipping more than 4,000 pastors in Uganda, South Sudan, the People’s Republic of Congo, and Rwanda.

A Difficult Start

When Richmond was a child, his father was murdered, leaving Richmond to care for his six younger siblings in the Naguru slum of Kampala, Uganda. “My father died physically, and in some ways we lost our mother as well. We realized she couldn’t provide food for us . . . and so as kids we had to survive,” he recalls. Richmond spent a lot of time on the streets, stealing and scrounging for food. “What began as a visit to the street became a lifestyle.”

When he was eight years old, everything changed for him. He enrolled in a Compassion International child development center at New Life Baptist Church, where he became a Christian and received education, consistent food, and medical care.

At 17, Richmond began serving at the very church that offered him hope through Compassion International, first as a youth pastor and later as an associate and senior pastor. With only an accounting degree, he realized he needed more training. “I was serving in a very dark, hopeless community, and the theological issues and questions that were thrown at me I could not deal with.” One day, as he was conducting a prayer vigil, a woman demanded that Richmond tell her what her three-year old child had done to God to deserve to die. Although his church looked at him with anticipation for an answer, Richmond froze. “I was so ill-prepared in that situation. When I walked away from that place, I called my senior pastor and told him I almost wanted to throw in the towel,” he says.

Ministry Launched at Moody

Richmond was desperate to find training. Steve Wilson of Compassion International told Richmond about Moody and helped him receive a Wess Stafford–Moody Scholarship, named after Compassion’s founder Wess Stafford ’70 and paid for by Moody Radio listeners. With enough financial resources to travel to Chicago, Richmond enrolled in Moody Theological Seminary’s Master of Divinity program.

“Moody became a family to me,” he says. “You are not on your own when you’re at Moody.” He recalls a professor gifting him with a winter coat when he found himself ill-equipped to withstand his first Chicago winter.

While praying for Africa and Asia with his fellow students at Moody, the idea for Pastors Discipleship Network developed. “It was then that I knew in my heart that I wanted to take my training and make it available for my fellow pastors in Africa,” he says. “When you train a pastor, you train a church. When you train a church, you train a community. When you train a community, you impact a nation.”

While he was still a seminary student, Richmond returned to Uganda where pastors from 500 churches gathered to hear him speak about what God was teaching him through Moody. Richmond cultivated a passion for training Christian leaders in his home country, but he needed support. He was joined by classmates Andreea (Plamada) Herholz MA '12, Emily Hartman MA '10, Emily Wakabi '11, Michael Wangler MA '11, and Nathan Sullivan '14, along with Moody faculty members Julius Wong Loi Sing, John Fuder, Andy Pflederer '87, and Russ Davis.

“I am so thankful that I had faculty and students join me to train pastors in Uganda,” he says. “It was an incredible time.”

Although Richmond had a platform to speak to hundreds of Ugandan pastors, teaching resources were desperately needed. The majority of pastors receiving his training did not own a complete copy of the Bible. Richmond asked his fellow Moody students for assistance, and together they donated 115 study Bibles to Pastors Discipleship Network for training the pastors.

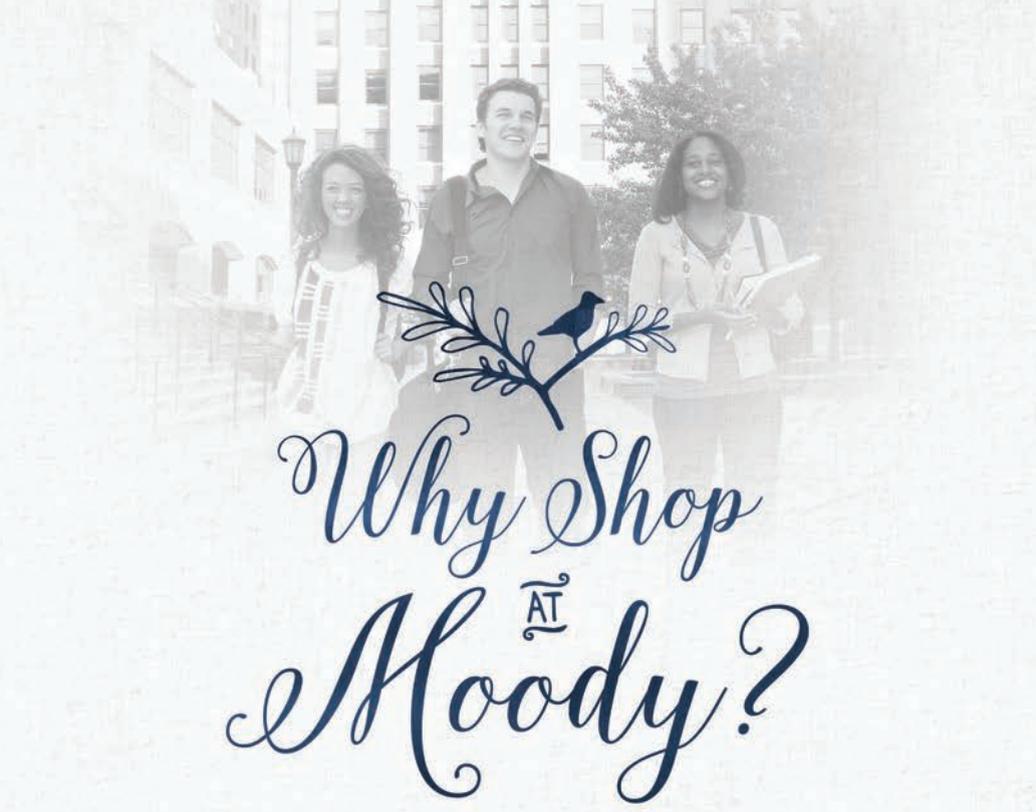

Today Richmond uses a six-step training program to teach pastors to be theologians, preachers, counselors, servant leaders, disciples, and entrepreneurs. In addition to yearly conferences, Pastors Discipleship Network has an active ministry to pastor’s wives and an alumni library with theological resources. Richmond also speaks internationally for Compassion International.

Looking back, Richmond never imagined he would receive the education to train pastors today. “God, who saved me, called me. And He opened doors that I would never have opened to get this high-quality, world-class training,” he says.

“I came to Moody without root but by the time I left, I was rooted in the Word. Moody provided quality academic training that positioned me well to encounter complex cultural and doctrinal issues in our ever-evolving culture.”

Haley Versluys graduated in December 2016 from Moody Bible Institute, where she worked in the Alumni office as an editorial assistant.
